THE FIX IS IN

CITY SET TO BEGIN MAKEOVER OF DAMEN-ELSTON-FULLERTON INTERSECTION

By Jon Hilkevitch | CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Work is set to begin Thursday on a project aimed at untangling the congested, confusing and high-accident six-corner intersection where Damen, Elston and Fullerton avenues meet.

The roughly $60 million project involves rerouting Elston to the north of the current intersection—improving traffic flow and safety for drivers, pedestrians and cyclists—and will take until late 2016 to complete, according to the Chicago Department of Transportation.

In the current configuration, the short distance between traffic signals creates driver confusion and the skewed intersection with tight turning radiuses makes it difficult to execute safe turns, traffic engineers said.

Weather permitting, the project will kick off Thursday with traffic reduced to one lane in each direction on Damen and Elston north of Fullerton to accommodate partial demolition of the Mid-Town building, at 2020 W. Fullerton Ave., CDOT officials said.

In addition, a section of land owned by Vienna Beef will be needed for the project, officials said. The sausage maker will be relocating its plant to Bridgeport.

Mid-America Real Estate Group has proposed constructing a more than 100,000-square-foot retail development, including a parking lot, on part of the Vienna Beef property facing Damen north of Fullerton. But the city has not approved the plan.

While providing an economic boost, that plan has stirred concerns over traffic.

After the demolition, lane closures will be shifted on Damen and Elston while new sewers and water lines are installed, CDOT said.

Additional lane restrictions will be announced in late June or early July on Fullerton just west of the Chicago River for utility connections, CDOT spokesman Mike Claffey said. One lane will be maintained in each direction through the work zone, he said.

UNTANGLING AN INTERSECTION

Work on the six-corner intersection of Elston, Damen and Fullerton avenues begins Thursday. At the start of the project, one lane will be closed in each direction on Damen and Elston north of Fullerton, with a number of other lane restrictions to follow.

If I were to ask you right now where to find that certain photo you attached to a tweet a few months ago, you'd probably need some time to think about it.

Here are five simple yet often overlooked ways to keep track of what we shoot.

click "Create Album." Or click "Photos," "Albums" and then "Create Album." You'll be prompted to upload the first photo. Once you do, you can add additional photos and give your album a name. Then — and this part is key — you can share it with friends or just keep it private.

Cloud

Consider the cloud as a backup for your backup. They're your photos and they're important, so protect them. As competition between cloud services increases, prices will decrease. That's basic supply and demand, but when it comes to online storage, get as much as you can comfortably afford.

Flickr

Flickr is not only a beautiful place to showcase your photos, it's also among the smartest places to store them. With 1,000 gigabytes — that's 1 terabyte — of free storage for every user, you can afford to put anything there. My favorite setting is the one that allows me to upload everything privately and then decide what, if anything, I want to make public. And a bonus — Flickr has always been really good for SEO and search.

Google

Google also has an auto backup, and it allows all your photos and videos to magically be saved to your Google account. From there, you can view them and organize them with other Google apps, including Google Drive and Google+. And the price is right: While Google explains that the cost of auto backup depends on your settings, you can back up an unlimited number of standard-size photos and videos for free.

HAVE QUESTIONS ABOUT SOCIAL MEDIA? TWEET THEM TO @SCOTTKLEINBERG WITH HASHTAG #SOSOCIAL. HE MIGHT USE YOURS IN A FUTURE COLUMN.

Instagram

We may not think of Instagram as a place to organize our photos, but that really depends on how you use it. Because Instagram forces you to crop your images as squares, people who post more than selfies can afford to be specific in terms of what gets uploaded. For example, living in Chicago I take a lot of photos of tall buildings, but Instagram is a poor place for those because of the cropping requirements. But my photos of food and drink almost always end up there because it's usually easy to show dinner in a square. I wouldn't recommend putting just any photos on Instagram; I'd recommend sharing the ones that you think have the greatest potential to be shared.

Facebook

It's far from the only place, but Facebook is really one of the best places to create albums. Because we share so much on Facebook, it makes sense to use it as a home base. Facebook will automatically create some albums, but you have a lot more control over these albums than you might realize. To create a new album from scratch, go to your Facebook profile, click "Photos" and then

Homicides from May 20
to 4 p.m. Wednesday

HOMICIDE TRACKER

By Megan Crepeau | REDEYE

The Memorial Day weekend saw 12 people shot dead from Saturday through Monday, bringing the total reported homicides citywide in the past week to 15, according to a RedEye analysis of preliminary police data.

This year's Memorial Day weekend killings outpaced last year's, when seven people were killed from Saturday through Monday of Memorial Day weekend, according to RedEye data.

Sunday was the single day with the highest death toll, when five homicides were reported across the city. The Humboldt Park, South Chicago, West Englewood, East Garfield Park and Kenwood communities all saw reported gunshot homicides that day.

Gunshot homicides were reported Saturday in the Near West Side, West Town, Austin and Albany Park communities. On Monday, killings were reported in Irving Park, Douglas and Austin.

Earlier in the week, people were shot dead in Bridgeport and South Chicago; on May 20, a woman was reported beaten to death in Archer Heights.

Thirty-six people have been reported killed citywide so far this month, bringing this year's homicide total to 157 as of Wednesday afternoon. Last May, 44 people were reported killed in Chicago; through May 27 of 2014, 142 people were killed.

Man who smoked pot with chameleon, went viral acquitted

By Steve Schmadeke | CHICAGO TRIBUNE

A West Side man whose video of himself smoking marijuana with his pet chameleon went viral and led to a misdemeanor animal cruelty charge was acquitted Wednesday by a Cook County judge who found his behavior immature but not criminal.

Bruce Blunt said he sometimes blew smoke into the mouth of his chameleon, Binna, because it seemed to calm the sometimes aggressive reptile.

Earlier this year, he posted a video of the two on Facebook that within days far exceeded 500,000 views and, according to trial testimony, triggered a complaint to Chicago authorities from People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals.

Chicago police arrested Blunt near his mother's home after conducting brief surveillance to find him over several days, according to trial testimony.

"I blew a little smoke on her and it didn't harm her," Blunt said outside the Branch 43 courthouse at 3150 West Flournoy St. "It calms her down because I see a difference in her mood."

"She turns lime green," his fiancée Kellie Williams added. "She's more relaxed."

In the video, Blunt holds Binna in his hand and twice blows smoke into her mouth. Each time, the chameleon closes her mouth, appearing to ingest it and then opens her mouth again.

Prosecutors said the video proved Blunt had criminally mistreated his pet.

"It's just a little guy," said Assistant State's Attorney Mike Bagnowski, speculating what effect the marijuana smoke would have on Blunt's attorney before withdrawing the remark. "He blew smoke not once but twice into its mouth."

Attorneys went back into the chambers of Judge Robert Kuzas to play the video for him. After hearing brief closing arguments, Kuzas acquitted Blunt of the misdemeanor animal cruelty charge.

Blunt's behavior was "really, really uncalled for and immature" but didn't rise to the level of criminal behavior, Kuzas said, noting the reptile didn't appear to suffer.

Now cleared of wrongdoing, Blunt hopes to get his beloved chameleon back from the city's Animal Care and Control—both for his sake as well as that of his 10-year-old daughter. He still has Binna's terrarium in a spare room that also contains two geckos, a 75-gallon salt-water aquarium and a guinea pig.

"I love animals, man," he said.

Rail-to-trail area planned for Northwest Side

By Leonor Vivanco | REDEYE

With less than two weeks until The 606 opens to the public, the creation of another rails-to-trails project on Chicago's Northwest Side is in the works.

Called the Weber Spur Trail, a 2.7-mile-long multi-use path would stretch from Sunnyside Avenue north to Devon Avenue on a run of Union Pacific Railroad; railway traffic ceased there in the mid-2000s and the tracks were later removed, according to the city.

At various points, the proposed Weber Spur Trail crosses at and above street level, intersects with the Sauganash Trail, connects to the Elston Avenue bike lane and crosses through LaBagh Woods, part of the Cook County forest preserve network, and over the North Branch of the Chicago River as well as the Edens and Kennedy expressways.

"This is a great project that's going to provide us with some wonderful recreational opportunities for our entire community," Ald. Margaret Laurino (39th) said at a public meeting Tuesday night at North Park University.

The city is asking residents what they would like to see on the swath of land, still owned by Union Pacific, where overgrown weeds and a gravel path now exist. Officials are looking for feedback on access points, types of recreational uses, seating, public art, maintenance, security and lighting.

The width of the land varies from measuring 25 feet to 100 feet. The railroad tracks were removed in 2009 and people walk along it now although they're not supposed to, said Janet Attarian, Chicago Department of Transportation project manager.

The project is similar to The 606, which runs along Bloomingdale Avenue for 2.7 miles on what used to be the Canadian Pacific rail line from Ridgeway Avenue on the west to Ashland Avenue on the east. The $95 million project will connect to six ground-level parks and run through Bucktown, Wicker Park, Logan Square and Humboldt Park. The elevated trail is set to open June 6.

Meanwhile, the city estimates it will take about three years to design and acquire land for the Weber Spur Trail.

While there is no design concept yet, the city is planning to develop two miles first from Devon Avenue to Elston Avenue and later extend it south to Sunnyside Avenue because the last segment has six viaducts and bridges over expressways, which can be costly to rebuild if necessary, Attarian said.

Construction is expected to cost at least $9 million and take about a year.

Another public meeting will be scheduled for the summer, Attarian said.

ALL OF CHICAGO'S GOING TO NEED A BREAK AFTER THIS SERIES

By Chris Sosa | REDEYE

To paraphrase a popular saying, you'd rather be lucky than good in sports. Well, a combination of the two is what you need to win a title, though just a little bit of bad luck can unravel a team's championship dreams.

Heading into Game 6 of the Western Conference finals against Anaheim, the Blackhawks had quite a bit of luck on their side to go with their considerable talent. And it paid off Wednesday at the United Center with their victory forcing what will definitely be an exhilarating Game 7 back in California.

Here's how Game 6 unfolded, taking into account when the Hawks and their fans were lucky, unlucky or just plain good.

LUCKY

To have Jonathan Toews and Patrick Kane under eight-year contracts. They're both only 26. They both have a LOT of world-class hockey ahead of them.

UNLUCKY

That Anaheim traded for Ryan Kesler. The former Canuck has been a thorn in the Hawks' side, especially for captain Jonathan Toews. In fact, their duels at the faceoff dot have been such a focal point of the series that the Hawks have tried to have him match up against anyone else.

GETTY IMAGES

GOOD

That the Blackhawks have found so much consistency. Five conference finals in seven seasons, including three in a row, is a run that will make just about any team in the NHL jealous.

UNLUCKY

That Patrick Sharp has the contract he does. He might have to be traded in the offseason so the Hawks can fit under the salary cap. Chicago fans don't want to part with a guy who has helped them win two Stanley Cups, but, you know, rules and such.

GOOD

The Blackhawks penalty kill has been excellent throughout the series, holding the Ducks to a 1-for-11 conversion rate through the first five games. They also killed Anaheim's first man advantage Wednesday, a boneheaded too-many-men penalty.

UNLUCKY

That the Blackhawks ran into the hottest goaltender in the playoffs. Entering Wednesday's game, Anaheim's Frederik Andersen had the lowest goals-against average among all goalies in the postseason, at a sparkling 2.06. Corey Crawford, by the way, was at 2.57.

LUCKY

When Corey Crawford inexplicably created an odd-man rush for the Ducks with a terrible pass that was easily picked off by Anaheim. Somehow the Ducks didn't even create a decent scoring chance with it, and the game remained scoreless.

GOOD

Assuming Brandon Saad has not hit his ceiling,

Chicago Blackhawks center Andrew Shaw tangles with Anaheim Ducks defenseman Cam Fowler and Simon Despres (24) during the first period of Game 6. ANTHONY SOUFFLE/TRIBUNE and there's a good chance the 22-year-old has not, he's going to be scary good. The winger streaked up the ice on a pass from Patrick Kane and beat Frederik Andersen five-hole to make it 1-0.

GOOD

Actually, Blackhawks fans were lucky this time that Duncan Keith didn't follow their advice to shoot. Instead, he found a wide-open Marian Hossa, who whipped it past Frederik Andersen into the half-open net. Before the Ducks could blink, it was 2-0.

GOOD

Come to think of it, "good" never is adequate enough to describe Patrick Kane. He undressed one defender and beat Frederik Andersen with a wrist shot from in close to make it 3-0. Just find the GIF and marvel at it.

UNLUCKY

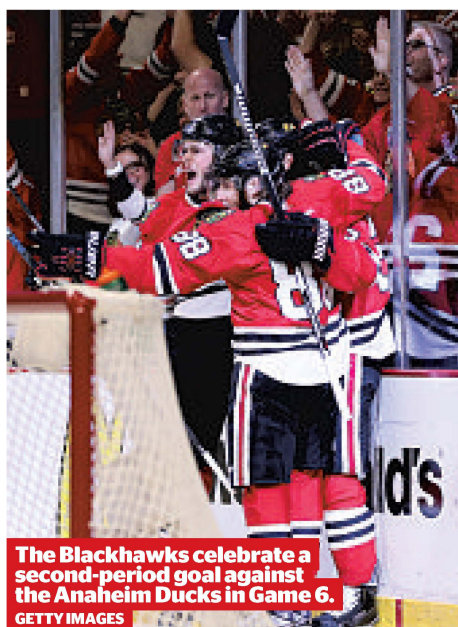

Anaheim's Patrick Maroon took a perfectly placed shot-pass and tucked it past Corey Crawford to make it 3-1. The Ducks don't take long to retaliate.

UNLUCKY

Clayton Stoner's blast early in the third period might have been stopped by Corey Crawford had it made it to the net untouched. Alas, it got a piece of a Hawks' stick and found the top corner of the net.

GOOD

The line of Andrew Shaw, Antoine Vermette and Andrew Desjardins played their butts off Wednesday. The proof is in Shaw's beautiful backhand goal to make it 4-2, which was set up by his hard-working line mates. Shaw also delivered the final (Chelsea) dagger with an empty netter to make it 5-2.

TOP 6 MOMENTS FROM THE BLACKHAWKS-DUCKS SERIES

By Chris Sosa | REDEYE

The Western Conference finals between the Blackhawks and Ducks has been an insane ride.

Multiple overtimes. Huge momentum swings, sometimes within one game. Goal-tending brilliance. This is all just the tip of a wildly entertaining iceberg.

Here's a look back at the top five moments from the Hawks-Ducks series.

GAME 2: GOLDEN GOALIE

Really, this entire game can be considered a Hawks highlight. It was the longest game in franchise history (116 minutes, 12 seconds), which Marcus Kruger ended late in triple overtime. But goaltender Corey Crawford deserves special mention in this one for making an astounding 60 saves in the 3-2 win. Per Elias, that is a Blackhawks franchise record for saves in a playoff game during the NHL expansion era. Mighty impressive.

GAME 4: 37 SECONDS, THREE GOALS

Blackhawks fans can laugh (just a tiny bit) at this now, seeing as their team won this game in double overtime. Yet at the time the Ducks' three lightning-quick third-period goals that gave them a 4-3 lead had the city more shell-shocked than losing out on the 2016 Olympics bid.

GAME 4: HE'S BACK

For whatever reason, forward Antoine Vermette ended up in coach Joel Quenneville's doghouse for Game 3. Well, the veteran center, who was acquired by the Hawks midseason, made Coach Q happy when he reversed course in Game 4. Vermette collected his own rebound in double overtime and sealed the win for the Hawks.

"I think overall on that shift, we talk about our speed, and I think we are effective when we move our feet," Vermette said after Game 4. "I think that was an illustration of that. We get the puck going in their end a little bit. We stuck with it. ... Lucky enough we got it back and put it in."

GAME 5: QUACK, QUACK?

No one seems to be living in the '90s more than Gordon Bombay ... er, Emilio Estevez.

The actor is making Chicago fans regret ever liking the "Mighty Ducks" movie franchise. Still, his newfound time in the spotlight is chuckle-worthy.

Great thing about Hawk is that it tastes just like CHICKEN. #hawks-fanshavenosenseofhumor TY to BOTH teams for thrilling fans of the sport! — EMILIO ESTEVEZ (@EMILIOTHEWAY) MAY 26, 2015

SUCK IT, WINDY CITY WIND-BAGS!!! DUCKS WIN! DUCKS WIN! DUCKS WIN! @Anaheim-Ducks @NHL — EMILIO ESTEVEZ (@EMILIOTHEWAY) MAY 26, 2015

GAME 5: TEUVO TIME, FOR REAL

The fact that Quenneville trusts 20-year-old Teuvo Teravainen to play big minutes in the playoffs says a lot. Though not as much as the rookie's performance is saying. Teravainen has been a consistent offensive threat and tallied a goal and an assist in Game 5. If he goes on to the grand career so many expect, he can look back on this game as a turning point.

"I'm confident," Teravainen said after Game 5. "I'm a lot more confident out there than with the media right here. That's a good thing."

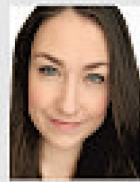

GAME 5: CAPTAIN SERIOUS = CAPTAIN CLUTCH

Jonathan Toews had been quiet for most of the series in terms of the score sheet. Then he almost singlehandedly rescued the Hawks in Game 5 with two goals in 72 seconds. The first was exhilarating yet conventional, cracking a slap shot off the post and in. The second was anything but ordinary, as he slid it off goaltender Frederik Andersen's leg from an impossible angle to tie the game with 37 seconds left. If only that had been the game-winner.

"We were feeling that we were going to get that next bounce, and we just didn't buy ourselves enough time," Toews said after Game 5.

As if the Hawks-Ducks series wasn't stressful enough, now there's this Estevez guy.

1	Where is your level of disdain for unabashed Ducks fan Emilio Estevez these days?	I ain't mad, but I think he prefers to go by Coach Gordon Bombay.	No higher than it was after I saw "The Way." Bleech.	[Bleep] that guy.	He's not nice, but if he wants to visit Chicago, I've got a guy who's got a guy who... you know the rest!	Are you kidding me? "Mighty Ducks" wasn't even his worst movie. Anyone see "Men at Work"? Didn't think so.
2	Why is the Cubs' Kris Bryant so convincing when it comes to umpires?	He just looks like the kind of guy who smells really good.	I'm not saying he's bribing them with doughnuts, and I'm not saying he's not.	It's all in the eyes.	In a previous life he was a trial lawyer.	Because maybe kids really DO know it all.
3	The White Sox offense had been so inept of late ...	I feel like there's a "yo momma" joke in here somewhere, but I don't care enough to try.	Don't know about the White Sox, don't care.	LOLOL. I can't even.	... they've been staying up too late watching Blackhawks games.	... that they are considering the DH. But in reverse.
4	Better QB battle: Josh McCown vs. Johnny Manziel or Jay Cutler vs. whomever?	Option C: Aaron Rodgers.	There must be a third choice.	Ugh. I hate all of those people. Don't care.	Are we talking strapping good looks? Bank accounts? Or stats?	I'd like to see the daily battle between Cutler and his hair products. That's got to be one helluva competition.
5	Besides tennis, what other sports should be played on clay occasionally?	Hockey would be the obvious choice.	Every sport should rotate among a ball pit, trampoline and quicksand. Variety, people.	Pole dancing. That's a sport, right?	I've excogitated the question: the National Spelling Bee because they are bellwethers.	How about human bowling? Just sllllide on down the lane. But watch out for the ball return. That'll getcha.

CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Bears chairman George McCaskey addressed the team's signing and subsequent release of Ray McDonald on Wednesday at Halas Hall, saying he has been second-guessing his decision to approve the move and questioning what could have been done differently.

McDonald was arrested Monday in California on misdemeanor charges of domestic violence and child endangerment. The Bears quickly terminated McDonald's contract and have spent the past few days dealing with the fallout from the situation after signing the defensive end in March despite his previous run-ins with the law.

In a five-minute session with reporters, here is what McCaskey had to say:

On his initial reaction Monday upon hearing that McDonald had been arrested after another domestic disturbance:

"The overriding emotion for me was sadness. Sadness for the child, for the child's mother and for the entire situation. Domestic violence is a vexing social problem. The NFL has had some high-profile cases, including this one. And the NFL, because it's a leader in society, is called upon to take action. Which we are doing. We're not going to do it by ourselves. But I think we have an opportunity to make an impact."

On the decision to release McDonald and whether he had involvement in that move on Monday:

"I wasn't involved because I didn't need to be. They knew what needed to be done and did it."

FORTE: I'LL BE AT TRAINING CAMP

Matt Forte knows his days with the Bears might be numbered, his contract set to expire in March. But Forte, at age 29 and entering his eighth season, also has a mature savvy with which to handle his predicament. So on Wednesday he made it clear he'd rather not play out 2015 as a contract year. "Nobody wants to play on a one-year deal, especially with the uncertainty of how football is," he said. Yet he added that the issue will not keep him from reporting to training camp this summer.

On whether he regretted authorizing general manager Ryan Pace to sign McDonald in the first place:

"I've asked myself that question a lot. What more could I have done? Is there somebody else that we could have consulted with? Should I have taken more time to make a decision? I don't know. We thought we had a good structure, a good support system and we thought we had the safeguards in place in case something like this happened."

On whether McDonald's problems will change the organization's approach in pursuing free agents with character concerns in the future:

"The one positive, if that's the word that can be used, to come out of this is that the process that we've set up has been reinforced. And in the end, it worked. As I've said, we had safeguards in place. Ryan came to me for permission [to sign McDonald]. So we have the reinforcement of that process to be able to make a better decision [in the future]."

Bird is the word

Chicago's first location of the South African chain delivers seriously addictive chicken

By Michael Nigrant | FOR REDEYE

There's something about chicken franchises that inspire cult fanaticism. When Chick-fil-A opened in Chicago, lines were wrapped around the block. Flights from Mexico to the United States were once known to smell of Pollo Campero because so many folks ferried back takeout orders on their way home. Nando's Peri-Peri, a flame-broiled chicken chain founded in 1987 in a working-class suburb of Johannesburg, South Africa, by two friends, Fernando Duarte and Robbie Brozin, inspires similar devotion. Jay Z was rumored to have included a request for Nando's on his tour rider when he played the Brit Awards. Prince Harry was seen making a getaway with chicken at the Fulham location in the UK. Harry Styles from One Direction apparently prepartied one Valentine's Day at the Leeds location. It must be good, right? But, you know cults aren't always good things, after all—Waco, Jim Jones, “Unbreakable Kimmy Schmidt” and all that. I stopped in to the first Chicago location in the West Loop (one is planned to open in Lincoln Park and one in Lakeview this summer) last week to see whether Nando's was a club worth joining.

The scene

I'm so not this guy, but the best adjective I can use to describe this location of Nando's is bangin'. Portuguese rhythms thrummed over the house speakers, the ordering line was twenty deep and the smell of flame-roasted chicken hung in the air. The dining room—outfitted with a rainbow-colored assortment of South African pottery, a forest of reclaimed honey-colored wood tables, flooring and wall panels reclaimed from a defunct Ohio crayon factory and mod gray chairs—was cheerful and original. The back patio was lined with a Pinterest-worthy spread of succulent-studded planters and chain-link fencing woven with multi-colored streamers, making the whole place feel like a barbecue- and beer-fueled garden party that I wanted to hang out at all summer long. Though Nando's has more than 1,000 locations worldwide, it truly doesn't feel like a chain. “No two Nando's look the same,” said Sepanta Bagherpour, director of marketing for Nando's Peri Peri USA. “It's not a ‘concept.’ We're a restaurant founded in a working class suburb. The first location was a mom-and-pop joint. We never tried to fill a gap in the market or go after the spicy chicken dollar. We just try to create great food,” he added.

The meat

The Chicago location's menu is almost exactly the same served worldwide, save for a few variations, including the Nandoca's choice ($11.75), featuring butterflied peri-peri chicken breast topped with coleslaw sandwiched between two pieces of garlic bread. Spanning everything from the famous chicken to salads to wraps to chicken livers, the selection is pretty vast. Jay Z might have 99 problems, but the chicken ain't one; Nando's famous peri-peri chicken is a traditional Portuguese poultry preparation that means the chicken is flame-roasted and marinated for 24 hours in African birdseye chili, aka piri-piri, the Swahili word for “pepper pepper.” The chain spells the name peri-peri, which is an African language adaptation of the Portuguese spelling. All the cuts of the famous peri-peri chicken preparation I tried were good, but my favorite (and the juiciest cuts) were the leg and thigh ($7.25 with one side). Though it's flame-roasted with a gas fire, the chicken had a deep smoky essence that reminded me of the very best charcoal-roasted birds. And the skin! Crisp, mahogany and flecked with pepper, I'd eat a plate of it alone. You can order the chicken slathered in a range of sauces, from mild to extra hot, and though it's not on the menu, Bagherpour said you can order extra-extra-hot if you're a chili-head. I love extra-hot—the spice was exhilarating but not tastebud-damaging, but if you're timid about spice, I'd still start with the medium. If you're not sure, order it plain and grab a bunch of the sauces from the free hot sauce bar to experiment and doctor as you choose. Stay away from the mango-lime and lemon herb sauces; while I appreciated their brightness, they had a harsh backnote that reminded me of the pasteurized bottled citrus juice you find in the grocery store. There's also a decent ribeye sandwich ($11.75 with one side) topped with roasted red peppers, pickled red onion, arugula served on a toasted Portuguese roll (a flatter, less crusty take on the baguette). It had a nice mix of tangy, spicy and rich flavor, but the beef was a little chewy and cooked well, though I'd ordered it medium-rare.

The sides

My favorite side dish was the "Macho" peas ($11.75), a Portuguese riff on the UK's popular mushy peas. The rustic mash of fresh, verdant whole peas tossed with cooling mint, searing chili and bright parsley was refreshing. The creamy red skin mashed potatoes ($2.75) bubbling with garlic butter tasted more like mom's rustic mashed potatoes than franchise food. Crunchy cucumber curlicues and pink slivers of pickled onion glistened with a tangy poppy seed vinaigrette ($3.75). The only side I tried that I didn't love was the fries ($2.75), quarter-inch-thick golden planks sprinkled with peri-peri powder that were limp on arrival.

The drinks

There's a wide selection of Portuguese and South African red and white wine offered by the glass, as well as pitchers of sangria. I dug the Gatao vinho verde, a crisp, fruity white that cut nicely through the spicy flavors ($5.25 per glass). If you need a second round, just order from one of the servers who are milling about the dining room.

The sweets

Though I didn't indulge, those who grew up eating at Ponderosa or Sizzler will have nostalgic flashbacks if they help themselves to the bottomless vanilla frozen yogurt ($2.95) available from the self-serve machine located in the dining room. I settled instead for a slice of dulce de leche cheesecake ($6.25). It was rich and dense with some satisfying caramel notes, but really tasted only about 5 percent better than something I'd pick up at Costco.

The service

You order your food at the counter and then get an assigned table number. Within about five to ten minutes, your order is ferried to your table in the dining room. The staff was friendly and responsive, asking multiple times if we needed anything else, and they bussed and cleaned surrounding tables with the speed of a Formula One pit crew.

Bottom line

Though the Nando's empire has more than 1,000 locations, it serves up rustic home-made-tasting side dishes and fiery succulent flame-roasted birds that taste much more like the rustic homey offerings from mom-and-pop roasted chicken spots in Chicago such as D'Candela or La Brasa Roja. Just stay away from the citrus sauces and order your bird spicy.

Taste of Chicago 2015 lineup includes 19 new food vendors

By Lisa Arnett | REDEYE

The Chicago Department of Cultural Affairs and Special Events announced its lineup of participating restaurants for this year's Taste of Chicago event, scheduled for July 8-12 in Grant Park. Of the 60 food vendors total, 19 are new this year.

New participating restaurants include Burger Bar and Sono Wood Fired pizzeria in Lincoln Park, Dia De Los Tamales in Pilsen, Old Crow Smokehouse in Wrigleyville, new lobster roll shop Luke's Lobster in the Loop, Emerald Isle in Edison Park, Haire's Gulf Shrimp in Auburn Gresham, La Bomba in Logan Square, La Mexicana in Bridgeport and Miller's Pub in the Loop.

New participating food trucks include Jack's Fork in the Road, Donermen, Bruges Brothers, La Cocinita and Yum Dum.

Other local vendors new to the roster include gourmet cream puff company Puffs of Doom, ice cream purveyor The Crave Bar, doughnut vendor Dinky Donuts and salad vending machine supplier Farmer's Fridge.

Admission to Taste of Chicago is free. Food and beverage tickets cost $8.50 for 12 tickets, and all vendors will offer a "Taste of" portion of a signature dish for the equivalent of $2.50 or less. Read the full list of vendors at tasteofchicago.us.

Animal Planet to try for adopted dog world record

By Gwendolyn Purdom | REDEYE

It will still be quite a while before the Bears officially take the turf at Soldier Field, but some other animals will be storming the stadium next month. On June 27, Animal Planet is inviting adopted dogs and their owners to join in an attempt to break the world record for most adopted pups and their people gathered in one place, according to a news release.

“Woofstock: The Road to Puppy Bowl” is calling for pet parents to bring their leashed and vaccinated adopted four-legged family members—and their adoption papers as proof, good luck finding those—to the free event. Animal Planet asks that attendees only bring their dog if it is “well-behaved, non-aggressive and doesn’t get stressed out in crowded, stimulating and noisy situations.” The party will also feature music, food, booze, designated potty areas so your pooch doesn’t confuse the goalpost with a fire hydrant, and, of course, dog adoption stations if you’re interested in adding to your own team.

What will be 2015's 'Song of the Summer'?

By Josh Terry | REDEYE

Every year, fans, music writers and industry suits talk endlessly about a "Song of the Summer," a fun and beach-ready pop anthem to soundtrack the season.

Figuring out whether there is a definitive "Song of the Summer" or whether it's just a craven but brilliant marketing idea isn't the point. Sure, "Song of the Summer" is almost definitely an arbitrary way for record companies to sell albums, and yes, it's easier to remember summer songs than any other season (has anyone ever said, "Dude, that song was totally my 'Song of the Fall' in 2011"?).

However, last year, Billboard ranked Iggy Azalea's "Fancy" and Canadian reggae duo that's-somehow-worse-than-that-description-sounds Magic!'s "Rude" as the two "Songs of the Summer." We can do better, America.

Horrifyingly, the forces of mediocrity return with two craven attempts for the "Song of the Summer" 2015 crown. First is Igloo Australia again with "Pretty Girls," which finds Britney Spears doing her best Charli XCX impression on the hook—a really weird sentence to write. Next is a track so pandering and so middle-of-the-road that it could only come from the worst-ever combination of a color and a number, Maroon 5. Titled "This Summer's Gonna Hurt," the song finds Adam Levine showcasing the enthusiasm of a 5-year-old who just learned a bad word when he sings, "This summer's gonna hurt like a mother[bleep]er" before promptly adding another "[bleep]er" just to prove that this is no longer your mom's Maroon 5. Man, it's bad.

In order for those songs not to get crowned 2015's "Song of the Summer," we have some listening to do.

AMY AND TINA TO THE RESCUE!

Try as they might, the folks over at "SNL" will never be able to re-create the sassy smarts and kickass chemistry of Tina Fey and Amy Poehler behind the Weekend Update desk. But Bif Bang Pow! Toys may have created the next best thing: 3 ½ inch action figures of the dynamic duo based on their Update days, ew.com reports. The limited edition $29.99 set, which features Fey, Poehler and a miniature fold-out Weekend Update desk, will debut at Comic-Con in San Diego on July 8. Barbie doesn't stand a chance.

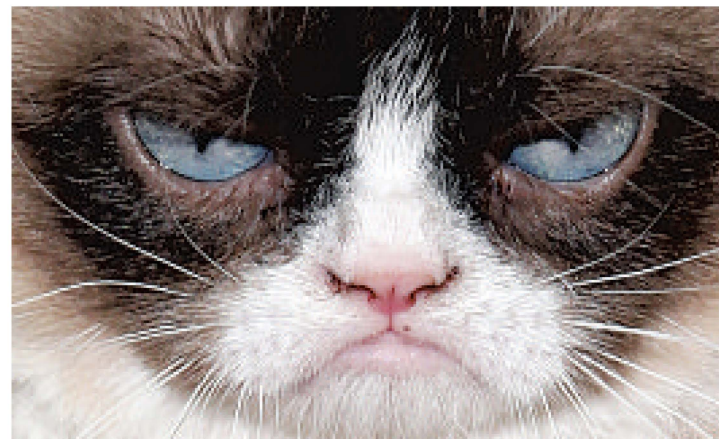

Momager TM

You've gotta hand it to Kris Jenner: The woman knows how to market herself. Us Weekly is reporting the 59-year-old Kardashian family matriarch has filed legal documents to trademark her "momager" moniker for a "new lifestyle brand she's launching," aka to bring her reality clan one step closer to world domination.

Welcome (back) to Earth

Break out the cigars! Twenty years after the original, "Independence Day 2" has officially started filming—because apparently every movie ever made is required to make a sequel now—according to an Instagram post from producer Dean Devlin, eonline.com reports. The pic shows the producer and Jeff Goldblum on the Albuquerque set of the follow-up film that is set for release in June 2016. What national monuments will the aliens blow up THIS time?

HOT DATE// FALL 2015

She's already scored a Lifetime original movie, but now the Internet's favorite disgruntled feline is getting her very own comic book, ew.com reports. Dynamite Entertainment announced the three-issue Grumpy Cat miniseries, which will follow the short-tempered adventures of Grumpy and her brother Pokey, on Wednesday.

THE DIGIT// NO. 12

That's where former Chicago gal Oprah Winfrey falls on Forbes' just-released Most Powerful Women 2015, the highest-ranking billionaire on the list (Ms. Winfrey is worth a cool $3 billion in personal net worth). So, who else made this year's cut? 2016 presidential hopeful Hillary Clinton came in at No. 2 (just behind German Chancellor Angela Merkel), Beyonce leads the entertainment field at No. 21 and Conde Nast artistic director Anna Wintour rules the media sector at No. 28. You go girls.
